As defined by United States law, bankruptcy is the settlement of the liabilities of individuals or organizations who cannot meet their financial obligations. Under the Arizona law, filing bankruptcy immediately stops all creditors from claiming their debts from you, unless the debts are sorted out in accordance with the law. In order to file for bankruptcy in Arizona, you first need to collect all your financial information. You can file the bankruptcy application either yourself or through your attorney. In order to be properly represented, the best option is to go through a bankruptcy lawyer.

Bankruptcy lawyers are those whose specialty is in bankruptcy law. A bankruptcy lawyer represents you in court, as well as helps you understand the complications involved in filing bankruptcy. They are the best guides, because they can help you rebuild your future by giving advice about debt consolidation and by protecting you from the harassment of the creditors. To look for a good bankruptcy lawyer, you can contact the Arizona State Bar Association's legal referral service and request a referral. You can also do research on the Internet, or flip through yellow pages to find a bankruptcy lawyer. The main goal of the bankruptcy laws is to provide the debtors with an opportunity to start fresh. In some cases, the law also requires that a debtor repay the creditors using property available.
