Atlanta trademark lawyers are lawyers qualified to act in matters involving trademark law and practices in Atlanta. They are familiar and well educated in different fields concerned with copyright and business issues. Many of the Atlanta trademark lawyers also handle civil and criminal cases.

Unlike in Commonwealth nations, Atlanta trademark lawyers, as well as other U.S. lawyers, need not pass specific exams to qualify and practice as trademark lawyers. Any lawyer can prosecute trademark applications before the United States Patent and Trademark Office (USPTO). Atlanta trademark lawyers are members of the Georgia State Bar Association.

The responsibilities of Atlanta trademark lawyers include advising persons and companies on the adoption and selection of new trademarks; filing applications to register trademarks; advising on the use and registration of trademarks; handling trademark oppositions, revocations, invalidations and assignments; and offering expert advice on trademark infringement matters. Atlanta trademark lawyers will explain the options available to protect your ideas and help you in making better business decisions. They offer maximum protection to your intellectual property. Also, if you own a trademark in the city of Atlanta and you want to know whether your trademark can be protected or not, contact an Atlanta trademark lawyer. They also make sure that your new business isn't using a registered trademark.

Atlanta trademark lawyers are often expensive, but courts can supply attorneys who work for smaller fees. A good lawyer can quickly tell whether your case is worthy or not, what time factor is involved, and the expected court fees. Some services of Atlanta trademark lawyers are available on the Internet; you can readily find information about their services and fees.
