Article by: Donald Harris

People living with debt that they can't handle have a few options to choose from. They can contact a debt or credit counsellor and try to work out a debt settlement plan. If this don't work, bankruptcy is the ultimate option. Unfortunately there may come a time in your life where unforeseen events may force you into declaring bankruptcy as a way to get your financial life back in order and regain your footing. Finding a bankruptcy attorney that understands your situation and circumstances is crucial to help your case and help you understand the law and how it applies. In New Hampshire there are a number of lawyers who specialize in this area and picking the right one takes some research.

Bankruptcy attorneys work to understand and represent you to the court. A good lawyer will always look at your entire financial situation and suggest filing for bankruptcy only after all other options have been exhausted. You should be very cautious of any lawyer who suggests filing without first looking at the facts and figures. Remember, this decision will affect your credit for 10 years until it ages off your credit report. Combined with the cost and potential loss of property it is something that takes an experienced lawyer who understands that each case is different and will offer counseling to the client instead of rushing to court.

An unexpected illness is the number one reason that most people go bankrupt. It doesn't take much, especially if you lack insurance, to drain your bank account and send your finances into disarray. You should never look at having to file for protection from creditors as a reflection of you. All one has to do is look at large companies such as Enron to see that companies use and abuse the system for their benefit - therefore you should not feel ashamed to use it for a legitimate reason. Donald Harris is a writer and internet publisher who writes about <http://www.1st-bankruptcy-lawyer.com> how to find a bankruptcy lawyer as well as legal issues in general.
