

Houston DWI Fines

Article by: Max Bellamy

Houston DWI fines have become stiffer over the years with the laws becoming harsher. There is increased societal pressure on the law enforcement agencies to stop the menace of drunken driving. Drinking and driving, as they say, don't go together. It is no different in the case of Houston. The good thing about Houston DWI laws is that they have been able to control or reduce the number of fatalities arising out of DWI accidents.

Steeper fines have been brought into place in Houston for DWI offenses. These steeper fines are debated and then passed as bills in legislatures. Law enforcement agencies are getting tougher with DWI offenders and doing their best to ensure strict adherence to laws by citizens. There are stricter driver responsibility laws in place in Houston now than ever before. You can end up paying through the nose for a DWI conviction. A first time offender could end up paying around $1,000 and a second DWI offense could set you back by $1,500. The charges being cumulative, a convicted driver can end up paying potentially $2,500 in a year. Now that is a reasonably good amount of money that you can end coughing up. It is therefore important that you hire the services of a good DWI attorney to fight your case. A Houston DWI attorney may be able to successfully defend you and substantially reduce the amount of the fine.

A Houston DWI attorney may be able to point out the mistakes that the law enforcement agencies may be made during the conviction or argue on the basis of wrong procedures adopted during the chemical tests. The sooner you hire a professional the better, during a Houston DWI charge.

Now for those of you who are wondering what the state does with money collected from fines, the answer is simple. The money so collected is used for funding important state projects. The trauma centers and the regional emergency medical services stand to gain from the collected fines. They add up to the state's kitty. Houston DWI Lawyers provides detailed information on Houston Alcohol Treatment, Houston DWI Arrests, Houston DWI Defense, Houston DWI Fines and more. Houston DWI Lawyers is affiliated with Houston Criminal Lawyers.