

Injury Attorneys

Article by: Kent Pinkerton

Personal injury law is the field of law that protects victims who are injured by the failure of another to do or not do something that results in injury. Often times, personal injury is caused by slip and fall accidents, workplace accidents, motorcycle accidents, and medical malpractice. If you have sustained a personal injury, you can hire an injury attorney to help you with your personal injury lawsuit.

What injury attorneys do

Knowing who is at fault for the accident leading up to the personal injury is not always clear. So it is important that you hire an injury attorney to assist you in investigating the acts of negligence that caused the accident. Not all accidents will result in just one person being found liable; an accident may have resulted from the negligence of several different individuals.

Additionally, an injury attorney can also help you in your personal injury claim. If you are a personal injury victim, you can claim two types of compensation: general damages and special damages. General damages are paid as compensation for an injury, for example, a payment for pain and suffering or loss of future earnings. The court will decide on the amount to be paid, but your injury attorney will help you get the highest compensation that you can claim.

Contingency fee

However, most claimants are often worried how they are going to pay their injury attorneys for their services. They worry that if they do not win their cases, they won't be able to pay the attorney's fee. Fortunately, personal injury services can now be paid on a contingency fee basis.

A contingency fee is the most common mode of payment arrangement for claimants seeking representation in personal injury litigation. This means that instead of billing the claimant on an hourly basis, the lawyer is entitled to a percentage of the settlement or the trial award. This percentage is usually in the amount of one-third. If you do not receive any settlement for damages, then your injury attorney also receives nothing.

Injury attorneys can really help you win your personal injury case. So you have to make sure that you hire a reliable and qualified attorney with years of expertise in the field.
