

Lawsuit Loans

Article by: Ken Marlborough

The funds that the lawsuit financing companies provide to the plaintiffs are not termed as loans. They are rather characterized as investments, venture capitals, or cash advances. The basic reason for attaining lawsuit funding is to avoid high charges of interest. The lawsuit funding companies provide funds to plaintiffs on an agreement from the plaintiffs to pay a part or share of the monetary refund received by the plaintiff after the verdict. What ever be the case the plaintiff can keep the cash advances made by lawsuit financing companies and need not have to pay until the final verdict is known.

There are many cases when the plaintiff cannot handle the monetary crisis. For example, when a case that is worth $10,000 costs $3000, the plaintiff can sometimes be left with no choice but to seek the help of a lawsuit funding company.

These lawsuit loans are profitable not only to the plaintiff but to the lawsuit financing companies. They profit when they pay their plaintiff an amount and the verdict turns out with a huge settlement, according to the agreement made between the plaintiff and the lawsuit financing company.

A predetermined share or partial amount from the final settlement is paid to the lawsuit financing companies. The lawsuit financers provide advances towards attorney fees, expert witness fees and commercial fees. Any situation where the lawsuit financier finds that its advances can bring large profits to its clients, the lawsuit financing companies help with their venture capitals.

The lawsuit financial loans are provided for personal injury, automobile accidents, malpractice, discrimination, harassment, accidents, wrongful deaths, fraud, theft, and more.

There are also various lawsuit financing companies which do not take recurring fees. That is, the plaintiff need not pay monthly fees for the lawsuit. Plaintiffs have to pay only after they win the case.
