

Louisiana Child Custody Lawyers

Article by: Eric Morris

Child Custody cases are very emotional, not only for the parents, but for the child as well. In such cases it is especially important to hire a good Child Custody Lawyer.

Louisiana laws are based on Roman jurisprudence, while in the rest of the USA the English system is followed. Louisiana's laws are passed by the legislature and the judges only interpret them; their rulings have no effect on the rulings of other judges in the similar cases. If your child's custody case falls in Louisiana, you should be careful in selecting the lawyer. A good lawyer is difficult to find, because he is usually busy with his cases in the courts and is not easily available.

But before determining which lawyer you want to hire, it would be advisable to check his affordability. Quality and price go together. Some lawyers charge thousands of dollars per hour. If you are short of money you may consult a new law graduate who may provide you with the required guidance, though it may not be a substitute for a good lawyer.

If the stakes are high, you must go for a good lawyer, because as the case moves forward, it tends to become more and more complex and you will require specialized expertise. Once you have made up your mind, you should be ready to ask all the questions regarding his fees, qualifications, length of experience and success rate in your type of cases. These questions are necessary to give you a clear idea of what you are likely to get from him.

Also, a written contract of services and payment should be prepared to eliminate misunderstandings at a later stage. Although the rates lawyers charge vary from state to state, those of the lawyers of Louisiana are around the national average. Also keep in mind that the referral services advertised on the web may mislead you into believing that the advertising lawyer's services are available in Louisiana also, but they belong to other states and may not be conversant with the Louisiana Child Custody laws.
