A divorce suit is perhaps the commonest of court cases. Social service institutions offering good Samaritan advice and legal knowledge, as well as do-it-yourself legal resources have proliferated in unprecedented numbers all around the country. Still, disputes and situations leading to divorce are sometimes so unique that standard interpretations of law cannot explain them and therefore, new laws and new rulings are coming up. Since the 'do it yourself' plans cannot match the unique situations, hiring a divorce lawyer becomes unavoidable.

This becomes all the more inevitable in Louisiana where the laws are different from other states. Here the rulings of the judges in the similar cases cannot influence the rulings and judgments in other courts, as happens in other states of the US. In Louisiana, the legislature frames the laws and the judges have to study them and interpret them in every new and extraordinary divorce case. Your efforts to do it yourself may result in a frustrating loss of time and effort. A good way out, therefore, would be to engage a Louisiana Divorce Lawyer.

The best course in selecting your lawyer is to contact the friends and referrals of a few lawyers and interview them to select the best one. When interviewing a lawyer, you should ask him about the length of his experience, the number of cases of your type he has handled, his membership in a recognized lawyers' body, and of course his references. There should be absolutely no hesitation in asking such questions. After all, you are not only paying him your hard-earned money, but your case is at stake. Besides, you can also ask him about the procedure or the process of the lawsuit, and how long the case will take.
