Drunk driving is one among the top criminal offenses in the United States. DUIs represent the single largest category of criminal offenses of all reported cases occurring more frequently than larceny and theft.

During the 60's, driving under the influence of alcohol was considered a minor offence, leading to minor fines. Nevertheless, since 1990's, most states consider it a major offense and repeat offenders are called felons.

New Jersey Law considers DUI and DWI serious misdemeanors. New Jersey considers DUIs a very severe charge and there are stiff penalties associated with the crime – both legally and financially. If charged with this crime, the services of a good legal should be immediately sought.

First time offenders face punitive charges that involve fines up to $500, a drunk driving enforcement fund surcharge of $100, court cost of $30, victims of crime compensation board penalties of $50, a safe neighborhood service fund surcharge of $75 and a physician's fee of $25. For first time offense, punitive charges are comparatively mild but are substantial spread over many fees

After being convicted of a DUI, the defender is caught in a circle of penalties. Consequences like license suspension, fines, community service, probation, and counseling are part of daily living for the defendant for a long time. For e.g. in most states, insurance rates for convicted drivers will increase 500 to 1000 per cent above the premium paid before the conviction.

Financial burdens are also increased because most credit bureaus contain drunken driving convictions and hamper the ability to raise credit, as well as future prospects of employment.

DUI /DWI fines are a serious burden on the defendant and must be tackled with the help of a seasoned lawyer.
