Article by: Jeff Lakie

Injury attorneys might better decide making the decision to sue. Okay that's sounds like double talk but its true. Dealing with the dilemma and choice of whether to sue or not to sue is better left to the professionals. They are better equipped to decide whether a lawsuit will prove successful than you or I.

Deciding to proceed with a lawsuit is indeed a large decision. There are many variables that can frighten people. And in some cases your life is dragged across coals and seemingly irrelevant issues about your personal life are brought to light. Proper counsel is imperative in order to survive the attacks from the opposing counsel.

As an example we can say your injury attorneys have determined your "slip and fall" was due to negligence on the part of a large grocery chain. Your physician says you will have chronic back pain for the rest of your life. Deciding on a lawsuit is just the beginning of a long journey toward judgment in your favor.

Once you have established a case whereby the injury attorneys are willing to represent you, mediation hearings and doctor visits will become your life. Documenting every emotion, every prescription and each and every day you miss work will fall into your hands. Injury attorneys do their part by investigating the grocery chain. Discovering other negligent cases that were won is always a positive factor.

On the hope that your case would be won and monetary compensation will be paid to you there will be choices to make there too. In the situation where a minor is involved in receiving the monies the guardians will control the decisions on how settlements are to be distributed. Structured settlements are a wise decision for any minor. In reality most adults are not mature enough to receive a large sum of money and make wise decisions.

A fixed annuity can be an excellent tool to satisfy each part involved in an injury settlement. Negotiations can adequately address the needs of all parties involved. An annuity is simply a contract or agreement by which a person receives fixed payments for a lifetime or a specified amount of time.
